the other day on his way home from the Master Plumbers' Convention in the East. Discussing his son's prospects of fighting Joe Gans for the ight-weight championship, Mr. Britt said:
"Never while I have a word to say about it—and Jimmy listens to me—will he meet a colored man. I would sooner see anything happen to him. He made a contract with me to that effect, but I suppose during the heat of excitement that night at the amateur bouts, when Gans challenged him, he agreed to meet him. I say now he never will, and I don't care what the public thinks about it.
